Livingston judged "Excellent" by the EASA Inspection Team

Livingston, the Italian private carrier owned by Ventaglio Group and specialized in leisure flights all over the world, communicates that, following to several interactions with the Italian Civil Aviation Authority (ENAC) and in compliance with the existing European laws as to the supervision to be performed by the National Authorities through the visit to the corresponding National Operators, on the 25th of September 2007, an inspection was carried out, at its headquarters, by the European Aviation Safety Agency (EASA). The inspection Team was formed by a Team Leader, belonging to EASA, two Inspectors belonging respectively to the Swedish and Portuguese National Authorities, and three ENAC officers.

The main topics which were discussed and analyzed by the EASA Team were the following:

- Quality System;
- Organization of the Technical Management, with special reference to the management of Airworthiness Directives, Technical Log Book System, Maintenance Program and MEL, Maintenance Contracts.

Following to such an inspection, the Livingston System was judged "excellent" by the EASA Team.

Such a result represents a further and important confirmation of the high safety standards applied by Livingston to all the aircraft of its fleet.

"We are proud of this inspection's result which confirms, also on a European level, the excellent opinion that ENAC has already expressed several times in the past on our airline company" – comment Chiara Magenti, Quality Manager and Andrea Scialpi, Technical Director of Livingston – "This outcome derives from many years of specific work carried out by a close, skilful and resolute Team. Our 'mission' is now to maintain these high safety standards, our main target since we started operations".
